Not sure if it matters or not, but Southern Company owns 15% of the pipeline if you want to lump them in with Dominion and Duke.

Like where you've go this headed.

I will not plan on being in the 3:45pm meeting as I think there is enough of us in the room already.

Thanks, scb

Looks good to me. It wasn't the perspective I was thinking, but I think it is the right perspective especially considering Morgan's concerns. Let me know how I can help

TWO Qs AND As:

Q: The pipeline has a lifespan of 40 or 50 years. How can you consign the state to this carbon pipeline for two more generations?

A: We are captive to only to our inability to guarantee electricity when the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow. We need better, more affordable technology to store electricity produced by renewables. We need a smarter grid to manage our electricity use more efficiently. We will get there, but we need to make sure that, in the meantime, we have reliable electricity to power our economy.

I will work every day to make sure that renewable energy continues to grow in North Carolina. Nothing could be finer than to be in a renewable North Carolina.

Q: How can you let this environmental injustice take place?

A: DEQ has questioned ACP about communities through which this pipeline will run. Between the mitigation ACP has offered to communities, and the Mitigation Trust Fund we are establishing, we believe we should be able to address any concerns. (The other point I would make is that the people in eastern North Carolina have been clear: they want jobs. We believe that with the mitigation fund, we can make natural gas more readily available to companies that will be willing to locate in eastern North Carolina.

Do we need a Q more specifically on sacred tribal lands? Or one that says, "environment advocates say Virginia could be close to denying the pipeline but your approval all but guarantees this pipeline will move forward, how do you respond"
